CREATING EXCEPTIONAL STUDENT EXPERIENCES

The history of the Thanksgiving holiday traces back hundreds of years to the tradition of celebrating the first harvest and giving thanks. This tradition was observed by Europeans and Native Americans alike. Historians often refer to a ceremony of thanks held by English settlers at the Berkeley Plantation in Virginia in 1619 as one of the original Thanksgiving celebrations. The settlers at Berkeley Plantation pledged their thanks to God for their healthy arrival in the New World after their long trans-Atlantic voyage. More famous, however, is the Thanksgiving feast held in the fall of 1621 at Plymouth in modern day Massachusetts. The Plymouth colonists celebrated their harvest alongside the Wampanoag Indians, and the event now represents a special moment of cooperation and interaction between European colonists and Native Americans. It also exemplifies being thankful for the results of hard work and the little things we take for granted. That famous "first" celebration in Plymouth lasted three days, and the menu included deer, geese, lobsters, grapes, and plums. Today, Thanksgiving is quite a bit different. It is now a national holiday, celebrated on the last Thursday of November. The celebration of giving thanks and enjoying a special feast of turkey and stuffing also commonly includes football and the following day's holiday shopping frenzy known as Black Friday.
